RE: HUD Docket No. FR-6124-P-01, RIN 2501-AD89 Comments in Response to Proposed Rulemaking: Housing and Community Development Act of 1980: Verification of Eligible Status

Dear Sir/Madam:

On behalf of Prosperity Now, I am writing in response to the Department of Housing and Urban Development’s (HUD) proposed rule to express our strong opposition to the changes regarding “verification of eligible status,” published in the Federal Register on May 10, 2019 (RIN 2501-AD89; HUD Docket No. FR-6124-P-01). At a time when countless families, especially low-income families and families of color, are facing significant challenges to securing affordable housing, the Federal Government should be using its substantial resources to help more families have access to safe and affordable housing that can create pathways towards achieving economic prosperity. Yet, if this rule finalized, HUD would be doing just the opposite, as it would effectively evict 25,000 immigrant families from their homes, including over 55,000 children who are eligible for housing assistance under federal law. We urge the rule to be withdrawn in its entirety, and that HUD’s long-standing regulations remain in effect.

As a national organization that is focused on helping to make it possible for low- and moderate-income individuals and families achieve economic prosperity, we strongly believe that affordable housing is a key part of financial security. For us, this means that not are housing costs reasonably priced for those seeking to secure a roof over their heads, but also that the housing they seek is consistent and stable. At the heart of this stability is having the choice over when and under what circumstances a household wants to move.

Unfortunately, although HUD contends that the proposed rule is a means of addressing the waitlist crisis faced by most Public Housing Authorities nationwide, this rule is nothing more than just another coordinated attack on immigrant families—one that ultimately leaves mixed status families with a difficult and unjust choice to make: either break up to allow eligible family members to continue receiving assistance or forgo the subsidies so that the families can stay together.

While we all share the concern that millions of U.S. households struggle to find affordable housing in the ongoing nationwide housing crisis, we know that blaming struggling immigrant families will not fix this problem. Indeed, HUD’s own analysis of the proposed rule concludes that fewer, not more, families are likely to receive assistance as a result of the rule. The real issue is the lack of sufficient funding to ensure that every family, regardless of immigration status, has access to one of the most basic of human rights—a safe place to call home.

While the remainder of our letter will explore in more detail why we strongly oppose this proposal, and the harms that would come from it if it were to be finalized, Prosperity Now urges that HUD immediately withdraw this cruel and counterproductive proposed rule and that it dedicate its efforts to advancing policies that strengthen—rather than undermine—the ability of immigrants to support themselves and their families in the future. If we want our communities to thrive, everyone in those communities must be able to stay together and get the support they need to remain stable, healthy and productive.

Thank you for the opportunity to submit comments on this proposal. Please do not hesitate to contact us at dnewville@prosperitynow.org or dryan@prosperitynow.org to provide further information.

Sincerely,
David Newville, Vice President of Policy and Research, Prosperity Now

RE: HUD Docket No. FR-6124-P-01, RIN 2501-AD89 Comments in Response to Proposed Rulemaking: Housing and Community Development Act of 1980: Verification of Eligible Status

1. In Forcing Families to Choose Between Being Housed or Being Together, the Proposed Rule Threatens to Undermine the Well-Being of Low-Income U.S. Citizens, Immigrants, and Their Families.

Family separations undermine family stability, and leads to toxic stress, trauma, and attachment issues in children. Even a temporary separation has an enormous negative impact on the health and educational attainment of these children later in life, and many parents struggle to restore the parent-child bond once it has been disrupted by a separation.4

However, since 70% of mixed status families currently receiving HUD assistance are composed of eligible children and at least one ineligible parent, it is likely that these families will forgo the subsidies to avoid separation. In fact, HUD is banking on this, noting in their regulatory impact analysis that “HUD expects that fear of the family being separated would lead to prompt evacuation by most mixed households, whether that fear is justified.”5 Therefore, this rule would effectively evict as many as 108,000 individuals in mixed status families (in which nearly 3 out of 4 are eligible for assistance) from public housing, Section 8, and other programs covered by the proposed rule.6 These mass evictions and departures from housing assistance will cause increased rates of homelessness and unstable housing among an already vulnerable population.7

These outcomes will not only hurt families while they struggle to find housing in the short term, but will also lead to reduced opportunities and increased health problems for these families in the long term.8 Studies have shown that unstable housing situations can cause individuals to experience increased hospital visits, loss of employment, and are associated with increased likelihood of mental health problems in children,9 and can dramatically increase the risk of an acute episode of a behavioral health condition, including relapse of addiction in adults.

Having safe and stable housing is crucial to a person’s good health, sustaining employment, and overall self-sufficiency. These effects will be particularly prominent in the children, nearly all of whom are U.S. citizens, in these mixed status families. Research has shown that economic and housing instability impedes children’s cognitive development, leading to poorer life outcomes as adults.10 Housing instability is directly correlated to decreases in student retention rates and contributes to homeless students’ high suspension rates, school turnover, truancy, and expulsions, limiting students’ opportunity to obtain the education they need to succeed later in life.11

a. The proposed rule will bar children who are U.S. citizens and lawful permanent residents from maintaining and seeking federally subsidized housing.

By eliminating the ability of mixed status families to receive prorated assistance on a permanent basis, the proposed rule robs eligible children of housing subsidies because they have parents with ineligible noncitizen status.

Section 214 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1980 (Section 214) limits access to federally subsidized housing programs to U.S. citizens and a specific list of noncitizen categories.12 Nearly all of the children in mixed status families who are receiving HUD assistance covered by Section 214 are U.S. citizens and lawful permanent residents (LPR) who live with parents or other adults who do not have eligible immigration status. HUD’s statistics show that 70% of mixed status families are composed of eligible children and ineligible parents. There are over 38,000 U.S. citizen and otherwise eligible children in these families, and over 55,000 eligible children in mixed status families overall.13 Since these children lack the legal capacity to sign leases themselves, the adult heads of household, including those who do not receive assistance, must sign these contracts on behalf of their family. However, by prohibiting the ineligible adults from living in subsidized units, the proposed rule forecloses the possibility of these U.S. citizen and LPR children from receiving any housing assistance under the covered housing programs. As explained below, the proposed rule directly contradicts the face of the statute governing these HUD regulations.

b. The proposed regulations are in direct conflict with their underlying statute and ignore amendments that Congress made to Section 214.

In the proposed rule, HUD claims to be revising its regulations "into greater alignment with the wording and purpose of Section 214," namely by barring mixed-status families from receiving assistance. To support its claim, HUD insists that Section 214 prohibits the indefinite receipt of prorated assistance by mixed-status families, but it cannot point to any statutory language containing such an edict.

In fact, Section 214 clearly conveys that Congress intended to ensure that individuals with eligible immigration status would receive assistance while keeping mixed status families together in the same home. The plain language of the statute conveys this intent. For example, 42 U.S.C. § 1436a(b)(2) states, "If the eligibility for financial assistance of at least one member of a family has been affirmatively established under this section, and the ineligibility of one or more family members has not been affirmatively established under this section, any financial assistance made available to that family by the applicable Secretary shall be prorated..." (emphasis added). The law explicitly permits housing authorities to choose not to affirmatively establish ineligibility. Congress did not mince words. "Shall be prorated" does not mean "may be prorated for some period of time." In mixed status families, HUD must provide prorated assistance.

The legislative history bolsters the straightforward reading of the statute. Section 214 was passed in 1980. In 1988, Congress included a provision by which mixed-status families who had been receiving full subsidy prior to the statute's passage could avoid family breakup. In its proposed rule, HUD twists that provision, which provides for temporarily grandfathered assistance, to claim that Congress only intended for prorated assistance to be provided for a limited time. However, Congress added the proration provisions in 1996. Congress has been consistent in attempting to guarantee that scarce federal subsidy would be provided for eligible immigrants and citizens while preserving the integrity of mixed-immigration status families. HUD's interpretation requires ignoring the plain language and the history of the statute. HUD should withdraw its rule because it is in direct conflict with the congressional mandate of Section 214 to provide prorated assistance to mixed status families.

c. The rule fails to consider that immigrants live disproportionately in high cost housing areas and pay more for housing than U.S. citizens.

Immigrants and their families currently face additional barriers in finding affordable housing. Compared to U.S. citizens, immigrant families are more likely to have higher housing costs, are more likely to face housing cost burdens, and are more likely to report difficulty paying for housing. Many of these additional burdens are attributable to the fact that immigrants disproportionately live in states with high housing costs. For example, California—the state with the largest immigrant population—has eight of the ten highest rental cost metropolitan counties in the country. The proposed rule will introduce additional burdens to immigrant families that already face significant hurdles in securing affordable housing, placing thousands of families at risk of homelessness. The proposed rule does not take into account these unique hardships and costs faced by immigrants in the U.S. housing market, and the rule should be withdrawn until HUD completes an in-depth study of these issues.

2. The Proposed Rule Will Hurt U.S. Citizens and the Aging Population

While it is clear that the proposed rule is a direct attack on immigrants and citizens in mixed status households, these families are not the only group that will be harmed if the rule is finalized. In addition to attacking mixed status families, the proposed rule creates red tape that threatens housing security for 9.5 million U.S. citizens currently receiving HUD assistance and all future U.S. citizens seeking these benefits. For example, the rule would require that all who declare they are U.S. citizens under penalty of perjury provide evidence of their citizenship, a practice that has proven to be burdensome, costly and unnecessary to protect program integrity.
Currently, to establish eligibility for access Section 214 housing assistance, U.S. citizens need to provide a declaration signed under penalty of perjury of their citizenship or nationality status. The proposed rule would require that these individuals also provide documentary proof of citizenship or nationality, such as a birth certificate, which can be extremely difficult for certain segments of the population. One survey from 2006 showed that as many as seven percent of citizens did not have citizen documentation readily available.23

Obtaining such documentation can be particularly difficult for U.S. citizens over the age of 50, citizens of color, citizens with disabilities, and citizens with low incomes. Older individuals face many challenges in getting this kind of documentation, including difficulties getting to government offices to replace lost records, coming up with the funds to replace these records, and some may have never been issued a birth certificate in the first place.24 That same survey suggests that:

- At least 12 percent of citizens earning less than $25,000 a year do not have proof of citizenship;
- Many people who do have documentation have birth certificates or IDs that don’t reflect their current name or address, such as people who changed their name;
- 18 percent of citizens over the age 65 do not have a photo ID; and
- 25 percent of African American citizens lacked a photo ID.

After Medicaid began implementing a citizenship documentation requirement, there was a sharp decline in Medicaid enrollment. Half of the 44 states responding to a Government Accountability Office survey indicated that Medicaid enrollment fell because of the citizenship documentation requirement. The GAO also found that states reported increased administrative costs and needing to spend more time providing help to applicants and beneficiaries, increasing their time spent on applications and redeterminations of eligibility.25

For those who are unable to produce the required documents within the required time period under the proposed HUD rule, they will lose their housing assistance, and many will be evicted from their homes. A significant share could become homeless. The figures above suggest that hundreds of thousands of U.S. citizens could experience these harsh consequences under the proposed rule.

The proposed rule places additional documentation burdens on 120,000 noncitizen seniors as well, by requiring noncitizens 62 years old or older to provide documentation of their immigration status.26 Presently, these noncitizen seniors are required to submit a signed declaration of their eligible immigration status and proof of age. Many immigrant seniors will struggle in the same way as citizen seniors to produce this documentation. HUD has not accounted for these concerns in the proposed rule, and should address these issues before finalizing the rule.

The proposed documentation requirements will be particularly burdensome for recipients of rental assistance who were formerly homeless, as well as for people experiencing homelessness who could be assisted by Section 214 programs in the future.

People experiencing homelessness often lose important documents such as photo identification, birth certificates, and social security cards because they have no safe places to store them.27 Adding more documentation requirements creates more barriers to housing for those who need it most, and could cause many people who have gained stability through rental assistance to return to homelessness. HUD has failed to take into account the added costs and burdens of these new documentation requirements and should complete an analysis of these costs before finalizing the proposed rule.

3. The Proposed Rule Will Reduce the Quality and Quantity of Federally Assisted Units

Secretary Carson stated that HUD has promulgated the proposed rule in an effort to address the waitlist crisis for subsidized housing faced by most Public Housing Authorities nationwide.28 While it is true that there is a public housing and Section 8 waitlist crisis—there are currently 3 million individuals on voucher waitlists around the country, with an additional 6 million that would like to be on these waitlists29—the proposed rule would not alleviate and would, instead, worsen this crisis.
In fact, by HUD’s own assessment, the proposed rule will likely lead to a decrease in the number of assisted families. According to HUD, if the agency were to replace the 25,000 mixed status families currently receiving HUD assistance with households comprising of members who are all eligible, this transition would cost HUD from $372 million to $437 million annually.\(^{30}\) To pay for these new costs of the proposed rule,\(^{31}\) HUD has surmised that the likeliest scenario, would be that HUD would have to reduce the quantity and quality of assisted housing in response to higher costs. In this case, the transfer would be from assisted households who experience a decline in assistance (in whole or in part) to the replacement households.

Ultimately, HUD’s own economic analysis shows that the proposed rule will not only fail to achieve its stated goals of addressing the subsidized housing waitlist crisis but will in fact exacerbate this very issue. The Regulatory Impact Analysis released by HUD makes it clear that the proposed rule will not further HUD’s mission to "create strong, sustainable, inclusive communities and quality affordable homes for all."\(^{32}\) In fact, the proposed rule will do the exact opposite, reducing the quantity of affordable homes on the market.

a. The proposed rule would lead to a reduction in the quality of federally assisted housing provided by HUD.

It is no secret that public housing conditions are deplorable in many parts of this country.\(^{33}\) Some tenants are living in units that are riddled with mold, rodents, and are in general states of disrepair as a result of decades of underfunding. Experts estimate that there is currently a $50 billion backlog of desperately needed repairs, and making matters worse, the Trump administration has proposed to eliminate the federal fund used to make (already insufficient) repairs.\(^{34}\)

Given this current state of affairs, HUD should focus on using its limited funds to address these inhabitable conditions faced by so many of its residents. Instead, HUD has taken the opposite approach. In the Regulatory Impact Analysis issued by HUD, the agency acknowledged that the proposed rule could create about $200 million in new costs and hurt public housing by reducing the "maintenance of the units and possibly [leading to] deterioration of the units that could lead to vacancy."\(^{35}\) In light of the negative consequences of the proposed rule, it is hard to see what legitimate purpose the proposed rule serves. We urge HUD to address this critical issue before it publishes the final rule.

4. The Proposed Rule Will Hurt the U.S. Economy and is in Conflict with U.S. Policy Priorities on Preventing and Responding to Homelessness.

Immigrants are a critical factor in keeping the United States’ economy healthy and growing. Currently, there are more than 27 million foreign-born workers in the U.S. labor market, accounting for about 17% of the total U.S. workforce.\(^{36}\) Immigrants are more concentrated in labor markets that literally feed and house America—immigrants make up 28% of construction trade workers and upwards of 70% of agricultural workers. In-depth statistical analysis shows that low-income immigrants and their families make important contributions to the U.S. economy, and that overall, immigration into the United States is a long-term fiscal net positive.\(^{37}\)

The proposed rule will cut into these economic gains by increasing housing instability—essential immigrant workers, particularly those in areas with high rents, rely on stable housing in order to maintain their employment, contribute to local economies, and help their communities thrive. The proposed rule does not adequately consider these issues, and HUD should study the extended impact the rule will have on the U.S. economy before publishing its final rule.

a. The proposed rule runs counter to U.S. policy priorities on preventing and responding to homelessness and poverty.

The proposed rule is in direct conflict with federal policy priorities of ending homelessness and federal mandates for states to provide certain assistance and programs to everyone. For example, the U.S. Interagency Council on Homelessness (USICH) has prioritized ending and preventing homelessness among families with children, regardless of immigration status.\(^{38}\)

USICH’s mission is to affirmatively remove barriers to housing access, all while acknowledging that "communities that are diverse—in their demographics, in their needs, in their geographic characteristics, in their progress to date, in their resources, in their infrastructure, in their housing markets, and in many other ways.”

The proposed rule directly contradicts this policy goal by erecting additional barriers to housing access. Furthermore, the rule is in conflict with the National Affordable Housing Act’s edict to ensure that “every American family be able to afford a decent home in a suitable environment.”

Although HUD acknowledges the potential costs of homelessness in their Regulatory Impact Analysis, noting that temporary and long-term homelessness is a likely for many families because of the proposed rule, it has not provided a detailed analysis of this economic impact. To fully understand the fiscal consequences of this rule, HUD should complete an in-depth study on these issues before finalizing the proposed rule.

5. The Rule Would Violate HUD’s Obligation to Affirmatively Further Fair Housing.

Adoption of HUD’s proposed rule directly violates the agency’s statutory obligation to affirmatively further fair housing. The federal Fair Housing Act (FHA) mandates that the HUD Secretary shall “administer the programs and activities relating to housing and urban development in a manner affirmatively to further the policies of” the FHA. In its 2015 regulation, HUD defined “Affirmatively further fair housing” to mean “taking meaningful actions, in addition to combating discrimination, that overcome patterns of segregation and foster inclusive communities free from barriers that restrict access to opportunity based on protected characteristics.” The affirmatively furthering fair housing obligation also includes “fostering and maintaining compliance with civil rights and fair housing laws.”

The proposed rule does nothing to advance fair housing aims, or compliance with other civil rights laws. Instead, it seeks to do the exact opposite by denying housing opportunities to thousands of immigrant families, using eligible immigration status as a pretext for discriminating against individuals based on their race and national origin. Furthermore, according to HUD’s own analysis, 70 percent of the households negatively impacted by this proposed rule are families with eligible children. Since minor children comprise the vast majority of eligible occupants of mixed status households, the proposed rule would also have a disproportionate and devastating impact on families with children. This clearly discriminatory policy is wholly inconsistent with HUD’s obligation to combat housing discrimination and segregation.

a. Aging Population

Federal housing assistance programs provide vital support to 1.9 million older adults who would otherwise be unable to afford the cost of shelter. Seniors with fixed incomes are especially at risk of serious harm if they live in mixed status families and lose rental assistance due to the rule because they have such limited resources to spend on other basic needs, including food, medicine, transportation, and clothing. The proposed rule would also make it impossible for many intergenerational families to live together and share resources that enable them to succeed. It ignores the critical roles many grandparents play in caring for their grandchildren and other family members, as well as the role adult children play in caring for their aging parents and relatives.

Furthermore, the proposed rule adds new documentation requirements that will be particularly burdensome on older adults. The proposed rule will require all U.S. citizens to provide proof of citizenship and will also require noncitizens 62 years old or over to provide additional documentation of their immigration status. Older individuals face many challenges in getting this kind of documentation, including difficulties getting to government offices to replace lost records, coming up with the funds to replace these records, and some may have never been issued these documents in the first place.

b. Children

The proposed rule also threatens the health of children and will effectively evict over 55,000 children who are eligible for the covered housing programs. The changes proposed are specifically designed to force families to make choices that will harm their child’s health. Mixed status families will have to make the excruciating decision... to either face eviction or separate as a family in order to retain housing stability. Both options will have lasting impacts on child and family health. Research shows that families who are evicted are more likely to experience homelessness, move into substandard or overcrowded housing, and have a sequence of adverse physical and mental health outcomes. The alternative, family separation, is a stressful and traumatizing experience for children, which can alter the architecture of a child’s developing brain and have lifelong consequences.

Approximately 18 million children in the U.S. live in a family with at least one immigrant parent, and an estimated 5 million children (of whom more than 80 percent are U.S. citizens) live in homes with at least one undocumented parent. While the majority of children in these households are citizens, the fact that they have at least one member of their household who has limited or no eligibility for public assistance based on their immigration status means that children in immigrant families have higher rates of poverty than children in U.S.-born families.

Access to housing assistance already remains limited for families—only one in four families who are eligible for rental assistance in the U.S. receive it. Nearly 40% of the of households currently receiving rental assistance include children. Research shows that rental assistance for households with children results in significant positive effects for future child outcomes and family economic security. Housing assistance lifts about a million children out of poverty each year, and can improve a child’s chances for long-term economic mobility—one study finds that children in households receiving Housing Choice vouchers have higher adult earnings and a lower chance of incarceration.

Housing assistance also improves child health—children of families receiving housing assistance had a 35 percent higher chance of being labeled a “well child,” a 28 percent lower risk of being seriously underweight and a 19 percent lower risk of food insecurity. Access to affordable housing provides stability for families and frees up income for other necessities. Low-income households with children that pay more than half of their monthly income on rent spend considerably less on other basic necessities—they spend $200 less per month on food, nearly $100 less on transportation, and about $80 less on healthcare.

This rule would add insult to injury by further limiting access to housing assistance for families with children. HUD estimates that 55,000 children will be displaced and at-risk of homelessness as a result of implementation of this rule. Child and youth homelessness continues to skyrocket in the United States—the U.S. Department of Education identified 1.3 million homeless children in the 2016-2017, which is a 70 percent increase since the 2007-2008 school year.

The proposed rule will only serve to further increase child homelessness, with detrimental effects to child well-being and our economy. Homelessness, even for a brief time, is extremely detrimental to a child’s healthy development. The younger and longer a child experiences homelessness, the greater the cumulative toll of negative health outcomes. Homelessness is also associated with an 87 percent greater likelihood of a child or youth dropping out of school.

A recent landmark study from the National Academy of Sciences finds that child poverty and homelessness cost our society over $1 trillion each year. This same study finds that making housing vouchers available for 70 percent of the families who are currently eligible would reduce child poverty by 3 percentage points.

This rule takes the opposite approach by taking away housing assistance from thousands of children and families, ignoring research from leading experts regarding what is best for the well-being of the nation’s children and families. Evicting families or forcing them to separate will not only harm children’s health today, but well into the future. We need policies that expand, not reduce, access to stable homes for families with children in order to ensure all children have opportunities to be healthy and reach their highest potential.
c. Communities of Color

The proposal would also take away critical public or other subsidized housing support from families of mixed immigration status would harm our nation’s Latino community and future. Today, the U.S. Latino population stands at more than 55 million, comprising 18 percent of the total U.S. population, and approximately one in five Latinx are non-citizens.\(^6\) By 2050, it is projected that nearly one-third of the U.S. workforce will be Latino.\(^6\)

Among Latino children, who account for a quarter of all U.S. children, the majority (52 percent) have at least one immigrant parent,\(^6\) and more than half of children of immigrants are Latino.\(^6\) Despite hard work and many contributions by Latinx community to the economy, this group continues to face prejudice and discrimination throughout the United States, and many continue to struggle to meet basic needs, including finding a home they can afford. This is not surprising, as there is not a single part of the country where a minimum wage worker working full-time year-round can afford a two-bedroom rental home. In 2017, 4.4 million (55 percent) Latinx households who rented their home were cost-burdened – meaning they devoted 30 percent or more of their income towards rent.\(^6\)

However, access to federal housing assistance has allowed hundreds of thousands of Latinx households to lift themselves out of poverty. According to an analysis conducted by UnidosUS, federal housing assistance – including public and other subsidized housing – lifted approximately 800,000 Latinx individuals out of poverty in 2017, including more than 280,000 Latinx children.\(^6\) While research suggests that the Latinx community remains underrepresented in these programs,\(^7\) the proposed rule would deter many eligible Latinx communities participating in public or subsidized housing programs, and increase housing insecurity for Latino families.

As HUD acknowledges, families that lose housing assistance are at risk of homelessness, with serious consequences for family well-being and child development. When families have access to housing assistance, they have more resources to cover the cost of nutritious foods, health care, and other necessities.\(^7\) Where families live is also directly tied to where they work. If parents lose access to affordable housing, they may also be at risk of losing their jobs.

For progress to continue in the Latino community and our nation, immigrants should have an opportunity to support the resilience and upward mobility of their families. The proposed changes by HUD fail in this respect as Latino families of mixed immigration status would be forced to break up to receive housing assistance, to forego the assistance altogether, or face termination from the programs.

Unfortunately, the Latinx community would not be the only community of color impacted by this rule, as the proposal would also cause severe harm to the Asian American Pacific Islander (AAPI) community, which is the fastest growing racial group in the United States. Adding to this, AAPIs are also one of the fastest growing poverty populations with more than half of all poor AAPIs living in only 10 Metropolitan Statistical Areas (MSAs),\(^7\) the majority of which are concentrated in the most expensive markets.

Analysis of US Census 2016 ACS data shows that the majority of all AAPIs in poverty live in zip codes with housing costs above the national median. This is true for both for rental housing (64% of AAPIs in poverty live in zip codes where the median rent for rental housing in the zip code is higher than the US national median rent), and for homeownership (65% of AAPIs in poverty live in zip codes where the median home value is more expensive than the US national median home value).\(^7\)

In short, poor AAPIs are already at significant risk of displacement, especially recently emigrated AAPIs who have limited proficiency with English. In fact, poor AAPIs are at twice the risk of displacement relative to the general US poverty population.\(^7\) Further compounding this issue is the fact that many AAPI families live in multigenerational households that include a mix of immigrants and US citizens.
The impact of HUD’s proposed rule, if implemented, would be devastating: the presence of a single ineligible member of a household could lead to disqualification of the entire household, including citizens, children, and the elderly who are eligible for public housing and Section 8 programs. In 2018, over a quarter of a million AAPIs received HUD subsidized housing assistance. Further, nearly 10% of AAPI households live in multi-generational homes, a figure that is likely much lower than the actual proportion reported anecdotally from the field, which is closer to 20%.

7. The Rule’s Impact Will Not Be Limited to Immigrants and Their Families, as HUD Has Not Adequately Addressed the Administrative Burdens Created by the Proposed Rule.

Under the proposed new requirements for documentation, tens of thousands of public housing agencies and private property owners and managers would need to collect documents “proving” the citizenship of over nine million assisted residents receiving HUD assistance who have already attested, under penalty of perjury, as well as the citizenship of future applicants for assistance. Housing providers would also need to collect status documentation from 120,000 elderly immigrants.

Additionally, the proposed rule calls for public housing authorities to establish their own policies and criteria to determine whether a family should receive continued or temporary deferral of assistance. All these requirements will place a significant cost burden on housing authorities and other subsidized housing providers that are completely unaccounted for in the rule. Housing authorities, charged with administering the public housing and Housing Choice Voucher programs, have spoken out against the proposed rule. For example, the president of the Public Housing Authorities Directors Association (PHADA)—John Clarke— noted that “[r]emoving a family is not free. It takes staff time. It takes legal resources. Staff will have to sit in court instead of screening families or going over eligibility applications. It doesn’t seem like a quality way to maximize the slim resources we do have.”

Other anticipated costs for housing authorities and other subsidized housing providers include:

- Formally evicting and terminating the assistance of thousands of mixed status families that HUD estimates would be $4.4 million.
- Unit turnovers because of the chilling effect of this rule on eligible immigrant families who will forgo housing assistance.
- Fielding questions from tenants fearful about the implications of the proposed rule on their families. Housing providers will have to be prepared to answer consumer questions about the new rule. They will experience increased call volume and traffic from tenants and applicants about the new policies.
- Updating forms and notices to ensure that they are providing tenants and applicants with accurate information about the potential consequences of receiving certain housing assistance.

Again, many of these costs and burdens on housing providers are not considered in the proposed rule. Moreover, these costs could deter housing providers from participating or continuing to participate in these programs, which would decrease the affordable housing supply even more. The proposed rule will require already overburdened public housing authorities and housing providers to take on additional administrative costs, without providing the benefit of reducing waitlists or improving public housing. HUD has failed to account for these costs and should do its due diligence and perform a comprehensive study on the impact the proposed rule will have on housing providers and local housing markets more generally, before finalizing the proposed rule.
